Images from the walk to the waymarker tree.

The mature Scots pine at Penny Hill, larger and broader but, in every way, the same tree AW drew all those years ago. Another century or more lies ahead, barring catastrophe. Note the absence of the 'conical conifer' that should (if it existed) be behind to the right.

Amongst the rough area of nettles beyond the pine, a heavy branch remnant lies forgotten, slowly rotting. Is this all that remains of the 'narrow conifer' that seems to stand in AW' sketch?
